N. F. The Curwensville Baptist Church was organized about 1836, with some twelve members under the pastoral care of Elder Samuel Miles. He was the first regular Baptist minister who visited the place. He found on entering the field one, Sister Ross, formerly a member of the Susquehanna church, and also Brother Lawhead and several of his family, members of the Milesburg church. These with soe baptised by the pastor, were the constituent members of the church. Other Baptist churches were organized as follows: Zion, 1837, Elder S. Miles; Newburg, 1844, S. Miles; Mt. Pleasant, 1822, Elder Richard Proudfoot; Westover, 1852, Elder S. Miles; Clearfield, 1855, Pastor D. W. Hunter; Happy Valley, 1871, Elder J. M. Chase; New Millport, 1873, an offshoot from Curwensville church; West Liberty, 1877, J. E. Dean; McPherson, 1879, E. C. Baird; Houtzdale, 1879; DuBois, 1879 J. E. Dean.

Along political lines, one of Curwensville's citizens who is interested in the advancement of our schools thinks that political education will soon be a part of the training of our schools. Gradually, the need of practical knowledge of the principles of government has made itself felt. Text books on political economy are now common and in several states a society for political education now exists. Ignorance of practical politics is, however, one of the causes which today make a large proportion of our people mere tools in the hands of manipulators and sharpers. The political training of the future will be broad. Not only will the characteristics of our own and other governments be studied but care will be taken that the student has familiarity with the rise and growth of parties; the underlying causes which foster affiliations and cause divisions. And why should this be studied? With these matters so closely connected with the general history of our country. With a largely increasing foreign population the necessity of such action will become more evident as time goes by. To all educationalists this matter should possess an interest.

The headlines of the daily papers should cause nation-wide applause when we read how the American boys withheld the on-rushing German hordes on the western front. This heroic action will no doubt cause consternation throughout the countries now fighting for world control. Hats off to the boys in khaki who are fighting to give us a free place to live in.

With all the Red Cross, Liberty Bond, War Saving and Thrift Stamp drives that have been made to help finance the war, our town and people have only heard one speaker—when Jno. M. Bain favored us with his presence. We should have some speakers come among us to enlighten these occasions.

Will the committee at Clearfield give us some consideration?

Wm. Johnson, our popular N. Y. C. section foreman, has a service flag on his home with three stars on it. He has two sons somewhere in France and one at Camp Lee, Petersburg, Va. Who no doubt will soon get a trip across the Atlantic. His eldest son, Grover, who is in France, has become the daddy of a new Red Cross nurse since he embarked for over seas. We at home can realize the gigantic task before us when we know as many of our brave young lads are going over to show what lightning trained American boys can do.

Williams said the words which made them happy. Both are fine young people and have the best wishes of their many friends. They will go to housekeeping in the Fulton Building on Curtin street at once.

The treasury of the Red Cross of Osceola Mills has been enriched $282.81 through the Loyal Order of Moose giving a benefit dance at the Slavish Hall, July 13th. The success of the affair was due to the efforts of Andrew Comitz and Joseph Danko Jr., who spared neither time nor energy. These young men and their loyal supporters have worked enthusiastically for all the war measures and in addition are at their posts daily helping to boost the coal tonnage for Uncle Samuel. The efforts of the various orders and individuals to assist the Red Cross is certainly appreciated as is shown by the result in work from their different departments.

THERE WILL BE NO PHEASANT HUNTING HERE NEXT YEAR

According to information contained in a letter received by L. C. Norris, Secretary of the Clearfield Hunters' Association from Dr. Joseph Kalbfus, Secretary of the State Game Commission, Clearfield county was closed to the hunting of pheasants or ruffed grouse for a period of one year at a meeting of the Game Commission held at Harrisburg, July 9th. Several petitions had been circulated and generously signed by Clearfield county hunters asking that pheasant hunting be stopped for a period of two years, but the Game Commission decided one year long enough to make the experiment.

The shooting of Ringneck pheasants, wild turkeys, Hungarian and Virginian quail will not be allowed for the next two years.

The sportsmen of the county realized that the action taken by the Game Commission was absolutely necessary if we desired to prevent the entire extinction of the native pheasant or ruffed grouse and it is now up to all lovers of the wild to see that the law is strictly enforced.

Under a law effective August 1 experienced women millinery workers in Massachusetts are to receive a minimum wage of ten dollars a week.

LETTERS FROM OUR SOLDIER BOYS

LETTER FROM NORBERT PLUBELL

Dear Mother:
 I have been expecting a letter from you for the past couple of days but have not received any yet.
 You should hear the boys trying to talk French.

I have not seen a house or barn built of wood since I left the States. Everything is built of stone. There are brush fences and stone walls about 10 or 12 feet high. The walls they have for fence is about like the W. B. Potter yard fence.

Mother when I get back I will be so hardened you won't be able to make a mark in my hide with a cold chisel. I just thought when I dated this letter that it was my birthday—23 years old.

I wish you could see how they trim the trees out here. They start at the top and come down. It makes the trees look like bean poles. Here they row white thorn for fence and home dig them up.

They carry water on their shoulder. A yoke like we used to put on. A. They have nice horses here. Tell I really don't know what to do. I have lots to tell if I only dared write it. But of course you understand how it is. We are at war. I am going to gas school. May finish the course tomorrow, am not sure.

This is a cold country now but when it warms up it is so hot. But there has been only one warm day since I came.

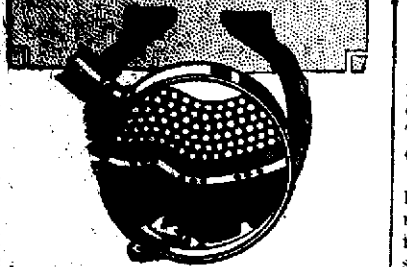

Will close for this time as I have some studying to do yet.

Your loving son

The Girl Who Had No God

By
Mary Roberts Rinehart

Author of "K"—"The Man in Lower Ten," etc.

A good half of the world, you know, just struggles along, and the other half is so snug, so satisfied; it's—it's horrible."

Mr. Ward stared at her. "How in the world do you come by such thoughts?" he demanded.

"I've never known anything else; I was brought up on the injustice of things. You have your poor here in the parish, but you see I was brought up with the poor of all the world. I am afraid I'm always for the under dog."

Neither startled nor Rev. Mr. Ward that summer afternoon on the terrace at the Hall, startled and puzzled.

"Down in our hearts," he said, "perhaps we are all of us for the under dog. But how does that excuse my hands?"

"Mrs. Bryant—how much do you suppose you are going to lose for your poor by her loss?"

"Not so much, but enough. She had promised a lot of things. She called up this morning to say that it was all off. He started to say that all bets were off, but decided that it was underlined and changed it. 'But I didn't come here to worry you about myself or the parish. I think you should not be here alone.'"

Elinor looked down over the village. "Then perhaps, after all, it would be better if I married at once."

"Ah! You are to be married?"

"Now that my father is gone," said Elinor wistfully. "It seems the best thing."

"And this Country Club affair?" asked Elinor.

thing. And—I should like children. I have no friends, except perhaps you."

Ward strove to keep his voice steady, and muffled of foot.

"Marriage is so serious—so vital a thing." He was trying to be calm and judicial. But his voice sounded far off; his heart pounded in his ears. "To marry because one is alone, or needs friends—is a flimsy foundation to build on."

Once again Elinor surprised him.

"There have been more really great passions in the world," she said. "I could almost count them on my fingers. The rest of us seem to get along without."

"Perhaps there are more than we hear about. Every now and then, in my work, I come across something so much greater than I had expected, self-sacrifice, love, clarity, as to justify my faith in mankind."

"Your faith?" Elinor said softly.

"That is what I envy you—your faith. Not only your faith in your kind, but—the other sort."

Faith, hope and charity—and the greatest of these is faith. Alas for old Hilary, who had not kept his!

"I had a governess once who had that sort of faith; it was a great comfort to her. But I sit here on my hillside, and it seems to me that spread out at my feet is all the injustice and cruelty and hatred in the world. And your God allows it all. My father tried to believe—tried hard, but he said that when he asked for bread they gave him a stone."

"Do you know who said that?"

"My father," said Elinor. Rather surprised, he let it go at that.

BODY OF DEAD MAN FOUND IN WOODS AT PHILIPSBURG

Philipsburg, July 16.—The finding of a man, evidently dead for many hours, in the undergrowth near the Moshannon creek, below where the old Pennsylvania railroad engine house formerly stood, Tuesday evening, about six o'clock created considerable excitement in town and the report was quickly circulated that the man had been murdered. A lad named Smith, it is said, made the discovery.

Chief of Police Sankey and Night Officer Brink were summoned and had the body removed to Weber's undertaking establishment, where it was viewed by a number of people. The face was horribly swollen, discolored and blood stained, but from general appearance it was thought by the officers that the dead man might be George Dixon, of Edendale, above Oscoda. Telephone inquiry at Edendale revealed the fact that Dixon had been away from home since last Saturday. Residents from his neighborhood were soon here and viewed the body, but could not identify the corpse, so distorted were the features. Three brothers of the missing Dixon man, David, Edward and Jerry, all residents in the Oscoda region, came later and viewed the corpse, and although they could not identify the body by the features or general appearance, the clothes and hat he wore were recognized. The hat was one which had been given to him recently by an Oscoda hotel man and bore the latter's initials. He gave a correct description of the hat over the telephone to Chief Sankey. In one of the pockets was a pipe also recognized by the brothers.

Dixon, who was known to his associates as "Ram" but whose full name is George W. Dixon, was aged about 39 years and unmarried. He lived with his mother and brother, Jack, at Edendale. He had but recently completed building a concrete wall, for which he had received pay, and it was thought he had considerable money on his person when he left home Saturday morning. He was seen in Philipsburg by various persons and at different times, on Saturday, it is said.

Among those who are alleged to have been with Dixon on Saturday were Charles Humphrey, James ("Red") Adams and Ernest Nelson (colored). These men were arrested and locked up for their appearance as witnesses at the inquest.

Acting Coroner H. C. Warfel, justice of the peace, empaneled the following citizens as jurors to conduct the investigation: John Beals, Roy R. Rowles, E. V. Gilbert, Frank Beals, Chester Hutchinson and Daniel Brink. They named Frank Beals as their foreman. After viewing the body and place of finding it and engaging a physician to make an examination they adjourned to meet again at two o'clock in Squire Warfel's office.

NEW OFFENSIVE ON DAN CUPID

Attorney A. H. Woodward began a major offensive against Dan Cupid in the Prothonotary's office this morning when he indicted the fat little cherub's marksmanship in four specific instances.

According to the different documents filed Cupid's arrows instead of making dead centers only wounded in each of these cases, the degree of suffering from the wound extending over several years in three instances and but several months the latest one.

In No 1 Joseph F. Hummel seeks a divorce from his wife Alice P. Hummel, who he married February 12, 1902 and lived with until Jan. 1 1917, when the wife deserted him.

In No. 2 Paul J. Kline asks for a divorce from Ollie May Kline after a married life extending from December 18, 1907, to October 28, 1917. He charges cruel and barbarous treatment and desertion.

No. 3 recites the woes of Elizabeth Lee who desires a divorce from Milton Lee, the charge being similar to that in the cases already cited.

In No. 4 James D. Conoway cries "quits" after four months of conubial bills and other thing. He gives the same reasons as in the other case only he and his wife were disillusioned after just four months of scrapping. They were married January 17, 1916, and she deserted him May 19, 1917.

GEN. FOCH LAUNCHES COUNTER OFFENSIVE COMMANDER SAYS "BOCHES RAN LIKE HELL"

CLOSELY FOLLOWS UP COLLAPSE OF TEUTON DRIVE WITH HEAVY SMASH

LOSSES DESCRIBED AS SLIGHT IN REPORTS BUT WASHINGTON WARNS COUNTRY TO EXPECT BIG CASUALTY LISTS

ALLIES ADVANCE ALMOST 2 MILES

The Americans operating on a 25-mile front between Chateau-Thierry and Soissons have hurled the enemy back over the entire front at one o'clock this afternoon. Twelve towns and a large number of prisoners were taken by the Americans who were still pressing forward, according to United Press dispatches from the fighting front. At the hour of cabling the Americans had carried the following towns west of Chateau-Thierry: Villers Heodon, Dammart, Courthamps, Licy-Clignon, Monthiers, Courcy, Belleau, Givray, se Gengoulph, Houtessvnes and other smaller villages, farms, and heights, including Jivery Wood. They advanced to a depth of 3 kilometers within three hours after it begun. Many towns within that depth northward clear of Fontenoy were taken by the Americans and French.

The American commander at Givray reporting the capture of the town to headquarters sent the following message: "Met the Boche on his line of resistance. Sharp fight. Boche turns tail and runs like hell, pursued by our troops. Hope have more prisoners."

American forces operating on a 25-mile front between Chateau-Thierry and Soissons have taken Courcy, Belleau, Givray and 9 other towns in a terrific smash against the Germans launched at 4.30 this morning. The advance has made a uniform penetration of 2 miles and the American commander on the front line has sent a message to headquarters asking permission to push on at 2 o'clock French time this afternoon. The American advance is part of a big counter offensive ordered by General Foch and which was carried out with the full element of surprise.

The French and American line swept forward uniformly over a 35-mile front. On the Marne and in the Champagne the Germans were unable to advance in the fighting today although the assault continued to be of sledgehammer violence. There is more than a chance that the counter offensive may be carried beyond its immediate objectives which have already been attained. Indications were that the German morale is showing signs of weakening and the Allies may push forward on the strength of this advantage. Permission was granted an American commander to press on and at four o'clock the forces were still going strong. Enormous numbers of prisoners were taken by the Americans and French fighting with them, the latest dispatches said. The Boche is apparently broken in spirit and is unable to stem the tide of khaki hurled against them. American airplanes are doing excellent work. That American units are taking a large part in the action was made in an official French announcement. No credit was given the French for the capture of the 12 towns referred to.

The front over which violent fighting is now under way was extended approximately 100 miles during this action. On the Marne and in the Champagne there was continual heavy fighting in the early hours today. The Germans pursued the plan of attacking heavily with large forces.

On the east of Chateau-Thierry and east of Rheims—the extreme end of the fighting front—the Franco-Americans held their positions firm. United Press dispatches filed by Fred S. Ferguson today stated that the French official statement said that the situation in the Champagne is unchanged. This was taken to mean that it was considered as good as yesterday when Allied chieftains declared the situation was "excellent".

So far there is no estimate of American losses. While front dispatches of the last four days have in most instances reported the American losses as slight, Washington officials have warned that these are based comparatively upon the results of the fighting and that America must prepare for a casualty list far greater than any yet issued in this country. That the nation will stand it bravely and strongly is the firm belief of officials.

Allied strategists described the present German assault on the Marne-Champagne front as an effort to encircle Rheims, cross the Marne and take Epernay. This was said to be the secondary objective as the primary objective of the Germans was to cross the Marne and take Chalons, which was frustrated.

BULLETINS TONIGHT
The big Allied Offensive with the Americans playing the "bass drum" is in full blast. We are fully protected in the event that anything big should come off. Our readers are invited to call The Progress this evening for the latest news on the big drive. Do not get too anxious. Not likely to be anything to report before eight or nine o'clock.

A COMPARISON
London, July 18, 4:35—The drive between the Aisne and the Marne is the biggest allied counter offensive since April 1917 it was learned authoritatively this afternoon. Many tanks are in action with the French and American troops.

The allied offensive in 1917 was carried out by the French between Soissons and Rheims, on a front of over 25 miles. It started April 10, and lasted six days. The French took 33,000 prisoners and 330 guns but suffered such heavy losses that General Vinelle was succeeded as commander in chief by General Petain.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN
Women section hands with pick and shovel are employed in the Cincinnati railroad yards.

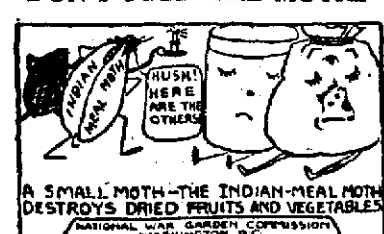

This is the first time that an attack of such a nature has collapsed so quickly, one high French official told Webb Miller, United Press staff correspondent at Paris in an interview. The German attack over the 50-mile front was confined this morning to a 20-mile front from Vignay to Combligny. Epernay is plainly the objective. The enemy was 8 miles from that town and was apparently being held firm when General Foch launched his counter drive. Fontenoy and Belleau were the two ends of the Allied offensive line. Americans have been holding this position. Other American units brigaded with the French are also in this action.

First Photo of Quentin Roosevelt As an Aviator in the Western Front

Lieutenant Quentin Roosevelt, the youngest son of Colonel Roosevelt, fell in flames. He managed to escape after he had brought down his first enemy plane. He was flying with three other pilots and became separated from them. He saw three planes coming toward him and that they were his comrades, but saw that they were Huns. He attacked one of them.

SERGEANT BROWN BROUGHT IN ONLY 159 PRISONERS

EDITORS NOTE: A paragraph of this unusual dispatch gives us some idea of the casualty lists we may expect in the near future. This regimental commander intimates that at least 1500 of his men died in this action.

With the Americans in the Champagne, July 18—After killing or capturing the crew of four machine guns and raiding a Boche trench with his automatic rifle until it was swept clean, Serg. J. F. Brown filed into American headquarters late yesterday with 159 prisoners. "I am sorry, sir, that I was unable to bring in all I had," he said, but four of the wounded died on me."

Everywhere the fighting of the Americans reflected cool headed determination to make the enemy pay the maximum toll. One American regimental commander on the Marne after the Germans had made a series of terrific but unsuccessful smashes against the line held in that part by his troops estimated that the number of Boches lying dead before his regimental position would reach 5,000. This would account for 2½ Germans dead to one American on the defense in that action. The most conservative estimates of the German losses in fighting during the three days past have been placed at not less than 80,000. Most experts place the loss at from 100,000 to 150,000.

This is the first general call for August, during which months the military program provides for the entrainment of 300,000 men. Special calls already issued account for 19,941 of this number.

Pennsylvania is asked to send 5000 men to Camp Wadsworth under this call.

The local Exemption Board is in receipt of the following special induction calls for Class 1 registrants from District No. 1 of Clearfield county, and are now enrolling volunteers for this service:

The following Calls are hereby announced for voluntary induction:

GRAVE SUGAR SHORTAGE CONFRONTS US

Sugar-carrying boats have been taken from Cuban trade and used to send our boys, munitions and food overseas.

If we continue our normal consumption there will be no sugar here on October 1st. All industries using sugar have been rationed by law and every householder is asked to conserve in every way possible. Don't use more than three-quarters of a pound weekly for each person including sugar for cooking. Use as little as you can. A sugar famine in this country must be avoided. We must send sugar to our soldiers. A person who wastes sugar or one who hoards it is a slacker and an ally of the Hun.

A NATURAL CONSEQUENCE

The news that Quentin Roosevelt, fourth son of our militant ex-president, had been killed in an aerial battle over the German lines failed to create much of a ripple among the people. It seemed a natural that this young man, representing the family of Roosevelts, should be among the first to lay down his life on the altar of right. His father was one of the first in this nation to insist on an active participation in the war instead of having this nation be only a profiteering storehouse on the Allies. He offered himself and his sons. We need not weep with Roosevelt. Teddy is not the weeping, whimpering kind of American. Sad though he is, Colonel Roosevelt is proud that he was privileged to give a son in the greatest battle of and for the freedom of mankind. Quentin's death only stiffens the Rooseveltian jaw and adds fervor and determination to the American people.

"TIN SOLDIERS"

How often we heard that phrase back in the days of national guard encampments. Our young dandies who preferred to turkey trot, shoot the ivories and indulge in the little trifling things of life hung every insult at the boys who desired to obtain for themselves a mite of military training which would fit them for real service to their nation in time of need. And how ashamed we are of ourselves that we permitted these things to be said. Sometimes we assented to the remarks—at least by our silence. Dispatches from the front tell us that the National Guardsmen are now bearing the brunt of the Hun attacks and of how well they are standing up under the thrusts. The "tin soldier" of five years ago is now recognized as the "iron man" of today. Never again will he be subjected to such infamous remarks.

WORTH MORE THAN THE COST

No form of entertainment or amusement comes so cheaply as the Chautauqua and it is really hard to understand why the people of this community hesitate to embrace the opportunity for this kind of wholesome entertainment. A circus coming to Clearfield would be assured of a large attendance at a greater cost for one day than the Chautauqua costs for a whole week. We can understand why those who have bought liberally of Chautauqua tickets and gave them away have retrenched this year but the average man who spends so much for amusement anyway can do no better than by the Chautauqua route. Take a tip from us: lay off on a few of the usual luxuries and treat your family to Chautauqua.

PHILIPSBURG SHOW CAUSES TROUBLE

The Progress does not care to meddle with the affairs of the local branch of the Navy League or throw cold water on any proposition they may take up in raising money for the work of that meritorious organization but an article in the Philipsburg Journal leads us to throw out a note of warning. A signed communication in that paper alleges that the promoter of a recent home talent show in Philipsburg took fifty seven per cent. of the gross receipts of the show or $1820. The total receipts were $3148.50. The men who drilled the cast and who now seeks to put on a similar show at Clearfield received fifty per cent. of the gross receipts or $1574.25 and in addition to this the expenses ran up to such a sum that only $588.70 remains as profit out of the gross receipts of $3148.50.

We have given only the bare figures. All agree that the play put on at Philipsburg was of the very highest order and that the promoter was an expert in his line but that it is a plain case of war profiteering is beyond doubt. The tickets to the performances were sold on a war charity plan. Those who bought tickets felt that they were contributing to a worthy charity. According to the published figures, of every one dollar ticket purchased the promoter benefited to the extent of fifty seven cents, expenses cost twenty-six cents and war charities came out at the little end of the horn with about seven cents. In addition to this it must be considered that the costuming cost to the individual performers was no small amount as many of the parents will testify.

Hotels are expected to give those profiteering promoters special rates, newspapers are frowned upon if they have the daring to charge for the advertising of his show; in fact everybody is expected to donate except the promoter. If this gentleman is willing to come here and put on a show at reasonable rates; then chalk us down for several tickets and we will enjoy the show as much as anybody but we do not propose to see anyone walk out of this burg with $1500 cash for two months work.

Thus far Clearfield has patriotically raised money to meet every war need and in such a manner that no individual has profited thereby. Clearfielders have the assurance that every dollar they have given to war funds has reached headquarters in perfect weight and value. Our sister towns have had all kinds of entertainments, lectures and other kinds of war benefits inflicted upon the and in what we have to say here we are only drawing from their experiences. It is said that the managers of the performance given at Philipsburg very much resent the letter published in the Journal saying that it reflects on the management. We have no criticism on the management or the ability of the promoter. We only insist that he be satisfied with a reasonable fee or percentage for training the cast in the event that he comes here.

VISITED CAMP MERRITT

Ralph Jordan spent a couple of days at Camp Merritt, N. J., the past week having gone down to see Lex Miller, who had been moved down to the coast from Camp Custer, Michigan. While in camp he ran across Vincent Stock, another Clearfield boy who is in the aviation section and had just arrived from Texas.

Raymond Wallace and Albert Hinkle, other well known Clearfielders were among the new arrivals at Camp Merritt.

TOOT CAPTURED THE KAISER

Ira Toot captured the Kaiser and says he can prove it by "Cooney" Well who recognized the author of shriek-like on sight. Toot was digging his potatoes yesterday morning and unearthed one peculiarly shaped tuber which when cleaned of mud presented an exact likeness of Kaiser's cruel countenance. Toot says he showed the potato to Cooney and he named him on sight.

The GIRL WHO HAD NO GOD

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART
AUTHOR OF "K", "THE MAN IN LOWER TEN", ETC.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Old Hilary Kingston, starting with Socialism, drifts into anarchy, and catches young Ellnor in the hall above the village of Woffingham a band of accomplished desperadoes who rob the rich, invite seditions and arm the rebellious. His motherless daughter, Ellnor, is raised to live lying and wrong thinking, to no law and no Christ.

CHAPTER II—In an attack on the Agrarian bank messenger, old Ellnor is killed, but is not suspected of complicity. Boroday brings the body home to the hall.

CHAPTER III—Ward, assistant rector of Ellnor, who consents to have her father buried from St. Jude's in the odor of sanctity, the chief of police recognizes Boroday and is suspicious.

CHAPTER IV—After the funeral the band meet at the hall and agree to go on as before. Ellnor acting in her father's stead. Huff asks her to marry him and she consents, though she does not love him. Boroday is arrested and threatened.

CHAPTER V.

Boroday had used his day's freedom to warn the band and to make plans for regaining his freedom. Of money he had none. What he had made under old Hilary's leadership had gone back to Russia, dollar for dollar. He had financed part of the Kiev defense of the Jews, had saved Prince Ovarsky from Siberia. There were other things. Money would save Boroday. And there was practically no money.

By unanimous consent they kept the news of his arrest from Ellnor.

It was Talbot who planned the country club, coup. The Russian was in jail then, on a trumped-up charge. Old Hilary dead and Boroday in jail—there was no one to advise caution.

"Boroday III!" Ellnor exclaimed. They were accounting for his absence from her Saturday-night dinner. "Why, then he should be here, where he can be cared for."

"We told him that," Lethbridge was always readiest with his tongue. "But he's not sick enough to need much, and he's decidedly disagreeable when he's laid up."

Ellnor was a little hurt.

In the arbor, after dinner, they planned the robbery. Where old Hilary would have taken a month to think and plan, they took minutes. There was a hall at the club that night, the last of the evening country-dance season. The entrance to the grounds was a mile from the clubhouse—two iron gates standing open between pillars, and dense shrubbery all about. Talbot would wreck his car there, driving into one of the gates. That would require each departing car to slow down, probably to stop.

The arrangement was that Talbot walk up to the club, and establish an alibi and his innocence by telephoning to a city garage for help. The rest was left to Huff and Lethbridge. A quarter of a mile away across the golf links, they would have a car in which to make their getaway.

Lethbridge was only lukewarm.

"We'll get a lot of jewelry," he objected. "What we need is money."

But Talbot was sure the loot would include money.

It was rather cleverly planned. From the vault Huff brought up a fine chain studded with spikes. Stretched across the road outside the entrance, it meant that every car passing over it would limp along on flat tires. It meant time to the bandits.

Huff and Lethbridge, who had left their car in a thicket over the hill, went first. Talbot followed soon, in his gray car.

"Good luck, boys," said Ellnor in echo of her father, from her garden, and went back into the house to watch the clock. At one, or a little sooner, the summer dances were early ones—she was to be in her garden again. The loot would be thrown over the wall.

She was there much earlier, hands cold, lips shaking with nervousness. Always old Hilary had done these things. She was profoundly frightened.

Ward, walking rapidly home from the club, saw her there, a little after midnight. There was a young moon, and at first he thought he must be mistaken. Then, when he was sure of her, he ran up the shallow steps. The gladness that was over him rang out in his deep voice.

"So now I have your secret," he said gaily. "Like all the other fairies, you are only to be seen in the moonlight!" "In the daylight," said Ellnor, trying to smile. "I frequent the woodlands, and miss my most agreeable visitor—my only visitor." She corrected herself.

Her hand was ice in his. "You are cold?" "Really, no."

There was a minute's pause. They had no common ground between them. Ward, who dreamed of her eyes, and took long walks up the hill in the mere hope of seeing her in her garden, found himself dumb, now that he stood before her. He had meant to be most impersonal, to run in, say a cheery "good night" to her, and be off. But face to face, with the dark house looming over them, he plunged into the thing nearest his heart.

"Are you still so alone?" "There are the servants."

"I think of you often. One of my windows faces this way, and I can see a light burning very late."

"I read at night. I do not sleep well. But you—you are up late, also."

"Ah!" He bent a little toward her in his eagerness. "You know that you know my window?"

"Yes. I watch it very often."

It was well for Walter Huff, crouched in the shrubbery at the country club, eyes glittering, automatic revolver in hand, that he did not hear the thrill in Ward's voice that night in Ellnor's garden, or her soft reply.

Many things cried for utterance in Ward; his pitiful sense of the girl's loneliness, a yearning desire to comfort her, to be near her—even more that magic night, a mad longing to hold out his arms and coax her into them, as one might coax some shy creature of the woods.

But Ellnor was suddenly aloof and distant again. At any time now a car would come wildly down the hill, and toss at her feet its defiance of law and ownership. What had she and this man before her in common? The thrill was in his voice now, but how quickly it would turn to loathing when he knew! She put out her cold hand, and he took it.

"I am going in now. Good night, and thank you for stopping."

Ward found himself dismissed, and, rather dazed, went down the steps to the road. But one thing he carried with him down the hill that night:

"I watch your window very often."

The reverend Mr. Ward left his light on all of that night, so fearful was he that she might look for it, and not find it.

And while it burned, under the very shadow of Saint Jude's once more the vault in the basement room at the hall swung open to Ellnor's practiced fingers.

The village rang with the news of the outrage the next day. No one had been hurt, but jewels of large value had been taken.

To Huff and the others, the raid had been practically a failure. There had been less than a thousand dollars in money—not enough to begin negotiations for Boroday's freedom. It began to look as though the dangerous business of selling some of Ellnor's jewels would have to be resorted to. Lethbridge was willing to undertake it, trying London first and then Paris.

Ellnor offered all the diamonds. If she must keep a part, she would keep the pearls. Talbot sorted out the stones to be sold, but left them with her for safety. She had never cared for her jewels. They were not half so lovely as her flowers—and she parted from them without a pang. But there was one pink pear-shaped pearl that had come in the night before, that she would have rather liked to wear.

On Monday afternoon Ward called on Ellnor. The memory of that short meeting in the garden had been with him ever since. There was a new light in his eyes, but she greeted him demurely, although she flushed with pleasure.

"Not in a woodland, for once," she said. "And all my fairylike attributes faded in the daylight!"

"Isn't it rather rash?" he asked gravely—"this risking the daylight?"

"I am here because I hoped you would come to see me. It was Ward's turn to flush.

"You said you were lonely, I thought—"

"I am alone, but not as lonely as you think. There is plenty to do. I have my garden, and I make up little bouquets for the school children. You should see how they love them. Some days I have a dozen clamoring in the road under the arbor."

Ward was charmed. He had a quick vision of Ellnor, eyes dancing and soft hair blowing, bending out of her arbor window and dropping her quaint sweet willows and marguerites, magnolias and garden roses, down to the children.

She led the way to the terrace, where Henriette was setting the tea-table. "Nevertheless," Ward said suddenly, "I am not at all sure I like your living here alone. It doesn't seem safe."

"Safe?"

"Perhaps I am unwise to alarm you. But this outrage at the country club—"

"Ah!" said Ellnor, and bent toward him.

"There is no longer any question that a band of desperadoes is terrorizing the county; an organized band of considerable intelligence. They get their information from the inside. This last outrage shows it. No one is safe."

"And this country club?" asked Ellnor, watching Ward intently.

"An audacious piece of work. Half the women in this vicinity suffered. Most of them are my parishioners."

"Ah!" breathed Ellnor. "I am sorry." Ward shrugged his shoulders. "Definitely. It means, I dare say, that the poor of the parish will get less than ever this year. Mrs. Bryant, for instance, who has always been generous, lost a pearl necklace and a wonderful pear-shaped pink pearl."

"Is she a wealthy woman?" "Very, I believe."

"Then it is such a terrible thing for her to lose the pearl? Perhaps these bandits, as you call them, think they could use these things better than the people who owned them."

Ward smiled. "I daresay we all think we could use the other fellow's possessions better than he does."

Ellnor persisted, frowning a little.

"Things are so terribly mixed up," she said. "If you could know the things that I know—Ward looked faintly amazed—the people who are fighting for a principle, and have nothing to fight with. Fighting for life sometimes."

N. F. The Curwensville Baptist Church was organized about 1836, with some twelve members under the pastoral care of Elder Samuel Miles. He was the first regular Baptist minister who visited the place. He found on entering the field one, Sister Ross, formerly a member of the Susquehanna church, and also Brother Lawhead and several of his family, members of the Milesburg church. These with soe baptised by the pastor, were the constituent members of the church. Other Baptist churches were organized as follows: Zion, 1837, Elder S. Miles; Newburg, 1844, S. Miles; Mt. Pleasant, 1822, Elder Richard Proudfoot; Westover, 1852, Elder S. Miles; Clearfield, 1855, Pastor D. W. Hunter; Happy Valley, 1871, Elder J. M. Chase; New Millport, 1873, an offshoot from Curwensville church; West Liberty, 1877, J. E. Dean; McPherson, 1879, E. C. Baird; Houtzdale, 1879; DuBois, 1879 J. E. Dean.

Along political lines, one of Curwensville's citizens who is interested in the advancement of our schools thinks that political education will soon be a part of the training of our schools. Gradually, the need of practical knowledge of the principles of government has made itself felt. Text books on political economy are now common and in several states a society for political education now exists. Ignorance of practical politics is, however, one of the causes which today make a large proportion of our people mere tools in the hands of manipulators and sharpers. The political training of the future will be broad. Not only will the characteristics of our own and other governments be studied but care will be taken that the student has familiarity with the rise and growth of parties; the underlying causes which foster affiliations and cause divisions. And why should this be studied? With these matters so closely connected with the general history of our country. With a largely increasing foreign population the necessity of such action will become more evident as time goes by. To all educationalists this matter should possess an interest.

The headlines of the daily papers should cause nation-wide applause when we read how the American boys withheld the on-rushing German hordes on the western front. This heroic action will no doubt cause consternation throughout the countries now fighting for world control. Hats off to the boys in khaki who are fighting to give us a free place to live in.

With all the Red Cross, Liberty Bond, War Saving and Thrift Stamp drives that have been made to help finance the war, our town and people have only heard one speaker—when Jno. M. Bain favored us with his presence. We should have some speakers come among us to enlighten these occasions.

Will the committee at Clearfield give us some consideration?

Wm. Johnson, our popular N. Y. C. section foreman, has a service flag on his home with three stars on it. He has two sons somewhere in France and one at Camp Lee, Petersburg, Va. Who no doubt will soon get a trip across the Atlantic. His eldest son, Grover, who is in France, has become the daddy of a new Red Cross nurse since he embarked for over seas. We at home can realize the gigantic task before us when we know as many of our brave young lads are going over to show what lightning trained American boys can do.

Arthur Harris and Miss Nanie Griest stole a march on their friends by slipping around to the M. E. parsonage at an early hour on Tuesday morning where Rev. Gordon A. Williams said the words which made them happy. Both are fine young people and have the best wishes of their many friends. They will go to housekeeping in the Fulton Building on Curtin street at once.

The treasury of the Red Cross of Osceola Mills has been enriched $282.81 through the Loyal Order of Moose giving a benefit dance at the Slavish Hall, July 13th. The success of the affair was due to the efforts of Andrew Comitz and Joseph Danko Jr., who spared neither time nor energy. These young men and their loyal supporters have worked enthusiastically for all the war measures and in addition are at their posts daily helping to boost the coal tonnage for Uncle Samuel. The efforts of the various orders and individuals to assist the Red Cross is certainly appreciated as is shown by the result in work from their different departments.

THERE WILL BE NO PHEASANT HUNTING HERE NEXT YEAR

According to information contained in a letter received by L. C. Norris, Secretary of the Clearfield Hunters' Association from Dr. Joseph Kalbfus, Secretary of the State Game Commission, Clearfield county was closed to the hunting of pheasants or ruffed grouse for a period of one year at a meeting of the Game Commission held at Harrisburg, July 9th. Several petitions had been circulated and generously signed by Clearfield county hunters asking that pheasant hunting be stopped for a period of two years, but the Game Commission decided one year long enough to make the experiment.

The shooting of Ringneck pheasants, wild turkeys, Hungarian and Virginian quail will not be allowed for the next two years.

The sportsmen of the county realized that the action taken by the Game Commission was absolutely necessary if we desired to prevent the entire extinction of the native pheasant or ruffed grouse and it is now up to all lovers of the wild to see that the law is strictly enforced.

Under a law effective August 1 experienced women millinery workers in Massachusetts are to receive a minimum wage of ten dollars a week.

LETTERS FROM OUR SOLDIER BOYS

LETTER FROM NORBERT PLUBELL

Dear Mother:
 I have been expecting a letter from you for the past couple of days but have not received any yet.
 You should hear the boys trying to talk French.

I have not seen a house or barn built of wood since I left the States. Everything is built of stone. There are brush fences and stone walls about 10 or 12 feet high. The walls have for fence is about like the W. B. Potter yard fence.

Mother when I get back I will be so hardened you won't be able to make a mark in my hide with a cold chisel. I just thought when I dated this letter that it was my birthday—23 years old.

I wish you could see how they trim the trees out here. They start at the top and come down. It makes the trees look like bean poles. Here they row white thorn for fence and home dig them up.

They carry water on their shoulder. A yoke like we used to put on. A. They have nice horses here. Tell I really don't know what to do. I have lots to tell if I only dared write it. But of course you understand how it is. We are at war. I am going to gas school. May finish the course tomorrow, am not sure.

This is a cold country now but when it warms up it is so hot. But there has been only one warm day since I came.

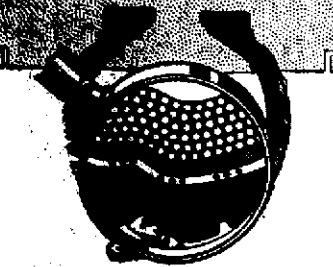

Will close for this time as I have some studying to do yet.

Your loving son

The Girl Who Had No God

By
Mary Roberts Rinehart

Author of "K"—"The Man in Lower Ten," etc.

A good half of the world, you know, just struggles along, and the other half is so snug, so satisfied; it's—it's horrible."

Mr. Ward stared at her. "How in the world do you come by such thoughts?" he demanded.

"I've never known anything else; I was brought up on the injustice of things. You have your poor here in the parish, but you see I was brought up with the poor of all the world. I am afraid I'm always for the under dog."

Neither startled was Rev. Mr. Ward that summer afternoon on the terrace at the Hall, startled and puzzled.

"Down in our hearts," he said, "perhaps we are all of us for the under dog. But how does that excuse my hands?"

"Mrs. Bryant—how much do you suppose you are going to lose for your poor by her loss?"

"Not so much, but enough. She had promised a lot of things. She called up this morning to say that it was all off. He started to say that all bets were off, but decided that it was under-estimated and changed it. 'But I didn't come here to worry you about myself or the parish. I think you should not be here alone.'"

Elinor looked down over the village. "Then perhaps, after all, it would be better if I married at once."

"Ah! You are to be married?"

"Now that my father is gone," said Elinor wistfully. "It seems the best thing."

"And this Country Club affair?" asked Elinor.

thing. And—I should like children. I have no friends, except perhaps you."

Ward strove to keep his voice steady, and matter-of-fact.

"Marriage is so serious—so vital a thing." He was trying to be calm and judicial. But his voice sounded far off; his heart pounded in his ears. "To marry because one is alone, or needs friends—is a flimsy foundation to build on."

Once again Elinor surprised him.

"There have been few really great passions in the world," she said. "I could almost count them on my fingers. The rest of us seem to get along without."

"Perhaps there are more than we hear about. Every now and then, in my work, I come across something so much greater than I had expected, self-sacrifice, love, clarity, as to justify my faith in mankind."

"Your faith?" Elinor said softly.

"That is what I envy you—your faith. Not only your faith in your kind, but—the other sort."

Faith, hope and charity—and the greatest of these is faith. Alas for old Hilary, who had not kept his!

"I had a governess once who had that sort of faith; it was a great comfort to her. But I sit here on my hillside, and it seems to me that spread out at my feet is all the injustice and cruelty and hatred in the world. And your God allows it all. My father tried to believe—tried hard, but he said that when he asked for bread they gave him a stone."

"Do you know who said that?"

"My father," said Elinor. Rather surprised, he let it go at that.

BODY OF DEAD MAN FOUND IN WOODS AT PHILIPSBURG

Philipsburg, July 16.—The finding of a man, evidently dead for many hours, in the undergrowth near the Moshannon creek, below where the old Pennsylvania railroad engine house formerly stood, Tuesday evening, about six o'clock created considerable excitement in town and the report was quickly circulated that the man had been murdered. A lad named Smith, it is said, made the discovery.

Chief of Police Sankey and Night Officer Brink were summoned and had the body removed to Weber's undertaking establishment, where it was viewed by a number of people. The face was horribly swollen, discolored and blood stained, but from general appearance it was thought by the officers that the dead man might be George Dixon, of Edendale, above Oscola. Telephone inquiry at Edendale revealed the fact that Dixon had been away from home since last Saturday. Residents from his neighborhood were soon here and viewed the body, but could not identify the corpse, so distorted were the features. Three brothers of the missing Dixon man, David, Edward and Jerry, all residents in the Oscola region, came later and viewed the corpse, and although they could not identify the body by the features or general appearance, the clothes and hat he wore were recognized. The hat was one which had been given to him recently by an Oscola hotel man and bore the latter's initials. He gave a correct description of the hat over the telephone to Chief Sankey. In one of the pockets was a pipe also recognized by the brothers.

Dixon, who was known to his associates as "Ram" but whose full name is George W. Dixon, was aged about 39 years and unmarried. He lived with his mother and brother, Jack, at Edendale. He had but recently completed building a concrete wall, for which he had received pay, and it was thought he had considerable money on his person when he left home Saturday morning. He was seen in Philipsburg by various persons and at different times, on Saturday, it is said.

Among those who are alleged to have been with Dixon on Saturday were Charles Humphrey, James ("Red") Adams and Ernest Nelson (colored). These men were arrested and locked up for their appearance as witnesses at the inquest.

Acting Coroner H. C. Warfel, justice of the peace, empaneled the following citizens as jurors to conduct the investigation: John Beals, Roy R. Rowles, E. V. Gilbert, Frank Beals, Chester Hutchinson and Daniel Brink. They named Frank Beals as their foreman. After viewing the body and place of finding it and engaging a physician to make an examination they adjourned to meet again at two o'clock in Squire Warfel's office.

NEW OFFENSIVE ON DAN CUPID

Attorney A. H. Woodward began a major offensive against Dan Cupid in the Prothonotary's office this morning when he indicted the fat little cherub's marksmanship in four specific instances.

According to the different documents filed Cupid's arrows instead of making dead centers only wounded in each of these cases, the degree of suffering from the wound extending over several years in three instances and but several months the latest one.

In No 1 Joseph F. Hummel seeks a divorce from his wife Alice P. Hummel, who he married February 12, 1902 and lived with until Jan. 1 1917, when the wife deserted him.

In No. 2 Paul J. Kline asks for a divorce from Ollie May Kline after a married life extending from December 18, 1907, to October 28, 1917. He charges cruel and barbarous treatment and desertion.

No. 3 recites the woes of Elizabeth Lee who desires a divorce from Milton Lee, the charge being similar to that in the cases already cited.

In No. 4 James D. Conoway cries "quits" after four months of conubial bills and other thing. He gives the same reasons as in the other case only he and his wife were disillusioned after just four months of scrapping. They were married January 17, 1916, and she deserted him May 19, 1917.
